A SURVEYOR'S CREED

As a Professional Land Surveyor, I dedicate my knowledge and skill to the advancement of human welfare and to all mankind, I pledge:

To be impartial and honest, serving with dignity and dedication, and offering the utmost in performance.

To live and work according to the laws of the State of Alaska and the highest standards of professional conduct, protecting the public against fraud, or unethical practices in the Surveying Profession.

To place service before profit, the honor and standing of the profession before personal advantage, and the public's welfare above all other considerations.

And with humility and Divine Guidance, protect the land imbedded in my trust.

Adopted from the Florida Surveyor's Creed. Printed by permission of the Florida Society of Land Surveyors.

PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION

The purpose of this Standards of Practice Manual is to provide the land surveyors of Alaska with a ready reference of land laws, a statement of minimum professional standards, a set of surveying guidelines, a list of sources of information commonly used by land surveyors, and a copy of the Alaska Society of Professional Land Surveyors' constitution and statement of ethics.

The need for re-examination and reprinting of an edited version of the Alaskan land laws became felt when the Directory of Alaska Statutory Laws As They Affect the Professional Land Surveyor, published in 1976, became obsolete and went out of print. It is the intention of the committee that the statute chapter of this volume be reviewed annually by the Standards of Practice Committee and that additions and deletions be made available.

The need for minimum standards of practice has been felt by the boards of Architects, Engineers and Land Surveyors which has had no concrete guidelines by which to judge the professional standards or competence of someone practicing land surveying in the state. Such a need has also been felt by local platting authorities when they encounter unique situations which deviate from typical practices. Several other states have compiled their own Standards of Practice Manuals; Alaska is pleased to join the trend of standardizing and regulating more carefully professional land surveying procedures within our state.

I wish to acknowledge with gratitude the contributions of my committee members: Maurice Oswald, Leroy Latta, Jr. , Richard Hankins, and Ray Niemi, all registered land surveyors. College surveying students also provided many hours of assistance. In addition, I appreciate the counsel of the several professional surveyors with whom I discussed these standards.

Stanley E. Sears, 1981

PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION

The intent of the Second Edition of the Standards of Practice is to update the Alaska Society of Professional Land Surveyors Constitution and By-Laws section, the Alaska Statute and Administrative Code section, the Standards of Practice section, and the Sources of Information section--Chapters 1 through 5. These are the only sections that were changed significantly. Other sections received only minor updates and additions.

This committee received many comments regarding the first edition of the manual, but none suggested substantive changes. Stan Sears, his Standards of Practice Committee, and the many volunteers have done an admirable job of putting together this important document. The second edition is humbled by the efforts of these people. They have established a very high standard for future committees to follow. With the adoption of the three-ring format, the primary task of future committees will be the updating and re-printing of various sections of the manual as they become obsolete.

Mark R.M. Holmstrand, 1983

PREFACE TO THIRD EDITION

In keeping with the old saying "if it ain't broke, don't fix it:", we began the task of reviewing the Standards of Practice Manual. We found that eleven out of twelve State Statutes had been re-codified and a large number of Administrative Codes re-written. In essence, our task was to publish a new edition. Had we not done so, mass confusion would have resulted for the many of us who had acquired the previous manual.

As we were re-publishing the Statutes and Administrative Codes, we also decided to consolidate the chapters dealing with the ASPLS, Standards of Practice, Guidelines, and Sources of Information. Finally, we changed the title of the manual to reflect the reorganization within.

While paging through the Alaska State Statutes and Administrative Code sections you will notice that the chapter numbers and the section numbers will not always follow in consecutive order. Parts of the manual have been edited to show only information the Committee feels is pertinent to the Alaskan Land Surveyor. All of the material in this portion of the book is taken from public records and is presented for informational purposes only. The Standards of Practice Committee should not be held responsible for its completeness.

Our greatest respect goes to those of the preceding committees whose forethought, research, and organizational abilities have created for Alaskan Land Surveyors a treasure chest of information.

Thomas W. Knox, PLS, 1986

PREFACE TO FOURTH EDITION

Our original intent was not to rewrite the Standards of Practice manual, but to update the statutes and administrative code for which there have been many revisions in the past seven years. Upon further review, it was decided that a new edition was warranted due to the increased activity of the professional societies in developing standards and the need to revise much of the informational text.

The most significant change in direction addressed by this edition is in the area of minimum standards of practice. Currently there are draft or final minimum standards of practice issued by The National Society of Professional Surveyors, The National Council of Examiners for Engineering and Surveying, The American Land Title Association/American Congress on Surveying & Mapping, and The American Society of Civil Engineers. This is in addition to federal specifications for geodetic control, state agency requirements and local government platting ordinances. We understand that will be the goal in the coming year or two for the national professional societies to resolve the differences in their documents and to issue a joint minimum standard of practice for boundary surveying. Given this direction, we did not believe that it would be beneficial to develop another set of standards specifically for land surveyors practicing in the state of Alaska.

After a review by the local ASPLS chapters and the Board of Directors, it was moved and passed that the Alaska Society of Professional Land Surveyors would adopt the NCEES Model Minimum Standards for the Practice of Land Surveying as our own.

We also intend to make the Standards of Practice Manual a more dynamic document by attempting to provide registered owners with updates at reasonable intervals. As such, we will look to the registered owners and surveying professionals to contribute ideas with regard to the Information and Guidelines chapters as well as to notify the editors if we have missed some pertinent statute or administrative code.

The need to disseminate this kind of information to members of our profession has been acknowledged for many years. The following quotation is from A Treatise on Surveying by John Gummere in 1860:

"Young surveyors who have not had the advantage of instruction from careful practical operators often meet with difficulties, and are much puzzled for want of the readiest means of overcoming them. In such cases, it is all important to keep themselves cool and collected; otherwise they may expect to be pestered with officious suggestions or mortifying remarks from the lookers-on, thus adding to their confusion, and rendering the chance of overcoming the difficulty more uncertain. It is presumed that young men undertaking the business have made themselves familiar with all the necessary calculations: in which event a little practice will enable them to adapt the proper means to the circumstances of the case."

It is hoped that this edition lives up to the standards set by the previous Standards of Practice Committees and continues to provide valuable information to members of our profession as well as to those who are entering the profession.

I would like to thank Karen Tilton, PLS of Design Alaska for her editing and preparation of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act paper, Paul Costello, SR/WA of the Fairbanks North Star Borough for reviewing that paper, and Neil Eklund, PLS and Eugene Mound, PLS of Stutzmann Engineering for their review and comments.

INTRODUCTION

Since its inception in 1960, the Alaska Society of Professional Land Surveyors has been the official voice of the profession in our state. It continues to be looked upon as an organization striving for the betterment of land surveying.

The ethics of the Society prepared by the original members remain valid today, thirty four years later. It is the obligation of each of us to become familiar with these principles and to strive to maintain them in our daily practices.

The Society needs the active support of all practicing land surveyors in the state in order to maintain a role as a forum for the views of the majority and as a vehicle for implementing those views.

HISTORY AND PURPOSE OF ALASKA SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL LAND SURVEYORS

A need for recognition and organization of professional land surveyors became apparent during the fall of 1959 when public hearings were held by the then "Territorial Board of Engineers and Architects Examiners" to review an upgrading of the law governing the engineering and architectural fields. The new law, as proposed by various elements of the professions, would have virtually eliminated the field of practice of the professional land surveyor. The few land surveyors who recognized this problem decided to attempt to call the others together to review this problem and perhaps combat it by having enough persons present some organized opposition to receive due consideration.

A form letter was sent to all land surveyors in the Territory calling for a Saturday afternoon meeting in Anchorage. Nearly thirty persons showed up. As an outcome, the Alaska Society of Professional Land Surveyors was organized and was strong enough to apply pressure upon the Board and other societies to stop the move apparent for a new law until the professional land surveyors' input could be established. A legislative committee was formed which worked with the several groups to better the entire engineering profession and to encourage cooperation between engineers, architects, and land surveyors. Our current law is a direct outcome of these many efforts.

The Alaska Society of Professional Land Surveyors continues to exist as a common interest group to share new technology, to review problem areas which would affect our profession or our clients, to cooperate with each other to the advancement of our profession, and to serve as a guide to others who are interested in regulating or adjudicating the work which we do.

CODE OF ETHICS

Ethics may be considered the often unenforceable duties beyond law that a professional person owes to the public, fellow professionals, and clients to create and maintain respect and confidence in a profession. Rules of ethics are only general guides of conduct, but must be practiced consistently by each of us to be effective for the group. The proof of effective ethical conduct comes from the opinions of others, and not from self-appraisal. Professional stature cannot be acquired by self-proclamation.

It shall be unethical for any member to:

1. Be other than a faithful agent of a client, and not to act with fairness between a client and others.
2. Attempt to supplant a fellow surveyor after definite steps have been taken toward his engagement.
3. Review the work of another surveyor for the same client without the previous surveyor's knowledge or termination.
4. Accept an appointment with a client to replace another surveyor whose just financial claims remain unsettled, unless the previous surveyor fails to press a legal claim within a reasonable time.
5. Publicly attempt to injure the professional reputation of another surveyor: A malpractice complaint shall be directed to the Society Board of Directors for appropriate action.
6. Advertise in self-laudatory language or in any manner derogatory to the dignity of the profession.
7. Use the advantages of security of a salaried position while competing with surveyors in private practice.
8. Reduce normal fees to underbid the known charges of another surveyor, or undertake any work at a price that will not permit a professional performance.
9. Attempt to practice in any field of surveying in which he is not proficient.
10. Engage in competitive price bidding.
